Availability: at every Groundswell counter as of the Monday following the two-month testing period.

Golden Hour — formulation facts

Primarily mango and pineapple, with a small amount of turmeric. Sweeter profile than Repair Red — appropriate alternative to recommend for customers who find Repair Red too tart.

Cup / packaging facts

- New plant-based lining introduced this spring — breaks down in commercial compost facilities, not backyard compost bins
- Commercial composting hauler partnerships active in 40 of 55 total cities, as of this spring
- Remaining 15 cities: not yet covered, primarily because those cities lack commercial composting infrastructure at all — this is a municipal infrastructure gap, not a Groundswell delay
- In cities without composting coverage, the cup is accepted in most standard curbside recycling programs
- Bottom of each cup carries specific disposal guidance for that market

Community programs — facts

Riverside location: river cleanup co-hosted with the Riverside Conservation Group. Last year’s event removed just under 900 pounds of debris from that stretch of river in roughly three hours. No advance sign-up required; walk-in participation.

Other locations may run comparable community partnerships — confirm with the specific location before stating a partner name or figure for a city other than Riverside.

What is NOT verified — do not state as fact

- Any specific percentage of "sustainability" as a single number — no such company-wide metric exists in these facts
- Any claim that Repair Red or any blend is "clinically proven" — the tart cherry research is general research, not a Groundswell-run clinical trial
- Any claim that all 55 cities have composting today — only 40 currently do
